

Gender Insanity

(Blog 0011 AndrewHadden.org)

I was reading David Limbaugh's book, "Guilty by Reason of Insanity: Why the Democrats Must Not Win," and his chapter on "Gender Madness," at God's direction. Finally, I said, "Oh, Lord, this is burdening me." God replied:

Stop. Listen. What are they saying? I didn't design. Things just happened. That's not the truth. I did design – male and female. They are different by my design. Not to oppress, to protect. Strength is needed, to protect, work, build. Women need tenderness to give to others, to comfort, heal, and nurture – to give primary care to children, tender care. Fathers can toughen later, as boys become men. Men need tenderness too – from their wives, children. Who gives it? Those built for it, protected to maintain it – women – wives and female children, a tender bond between them.

Without tenderness the world rots – from within. It is essential. Who gives it? The protected. Who protects it? Those designed to protect, designed for strength, aggression when necessary. Who else would protect, naturally? The two designs make a unit, tough and tender as designed, functioning together, both honored, valued, in their role. I designed roles. Respect them, preserve them, and prosper. Reject them at your peril, your society rotting from within – its fundamental unit destroyed.

Then God said, "Blog it."
