

Christ's Cry To and About His House

(Blog 0026 AndrewHadden.org)

God had me reviewing things he had said since June first. Then I came across this word he had indicated he wanted put up on the web, on a blog, but not given the timing. When God said this, he had indicated he had more to say. Then I sensed he wanted something put on the web, and he confirmed it, saying, "Put it up." I had recently been thinking of explaining, further, why those that were judged by God and died, were judged and died. Then I heard Christ say:

What do I want? A shout. Shout out my purposes, that I am coming, that there is a great harvest to bring in. That my people are asleep, even their leaders. They live for comforts, an easy life, rather than to win the lost, save the perishing. They are comfortable with their churches, their salaries, benefits, and honor. They live for it, not for me. They do not live for me, not waiting upon me, serving me, listening for my next command, burden, assignment, person to pursue and win to me. They live for salaries and benefits and pleasure.

Where are the prophets? Where are those I have raised up to say what needs to be said, and heard? Where are the pulpits that burn with my words? Where are the altars washed with tears? They will come – by judgment. I will judge my House. Then it will be my House."
